

Volta – Hunger

I am the Weaver.

I have spent these last weeks walking in the dreams of Volta. I have walked the webs that stretch beneath the surface of the dreaming. I have walked hidden paths, protected and hidden by the protective web of Grandmother Spider.

At the behest of the Voltan people, and in their defense, I have walked into the dreams of winter. I have walked through dreams of hunger and despair, of ice and cold, of flesh and strength. I have walked through savage dreams of fangs ripping into still beating hearts. I have suffered through dreams of elegant finery and covered silver platters containing the hopes of entire civilizations.

But from your decisions, from your hopes and dreams, and with the information that I have learned, I think there is a chance we can end the winter that has plagued us. The Wendigo, once a respected totem, has become something it should not be. It has become a plague upon Volta and her people, and I ask you all now to help me shoulder the burden of making things right again.

If able, come to Velno, in Cathym. Close to the lines of battle to the north, at the feet of the Frostpeak Mountains. There, we will weave our web. There, we will correct the wrongs that have been wrought, and attempt to end the winter that plagues us.

Come to Velno, bring your hopes. Polish them until they shine like steel. Bring your dreams. Sharpen them until they cut like truth. Bring your will. Temper it with duty and resolve.

These are the weapons with which we will fight the Wendigo.
